U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit: Partial Stay of Department of Homeland Security's Public Charge Rule

On August 12, 2020, a judge from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit issued a partial stay of the New York District Court's temporary injunction which blocked implementation and enforcement of the DHS Public Charge rule nationwide for the duration of the COVID-19 public health emergency. This partial stay means that the public charge rule is now back in effect as of August 12, 2020, in most states, including in Illinois. The injunction however remains in effect only for states covered by the Second Circuit (New York, Vermont, and Connecticut).

The separate district court opinion issuing a preliminary injunction barring enforcement of the Department of State's Public Charge rule, which applies to visa applicants for admission from abroad, remains in effect for now. The preliminary injunction barring the enforcement of the presidential health insurance proclamation that would restrict immigration to the United States by people who are uninsured and cannot pay the costs of their health care also continues to be in effect nationwide.
